LUNA LULLABY'S BOSOM BABY™ PILLOW MEETS CALIFORNIA'S TECHNICAL BULLETIN 117 FLAMMABILITY REQUIREMENTS AND REMAINS FLAME RETARDANT CHEMICAL FREE.

McKinney, TX. (May 26, 2011) – A recent study from Environmental Science and Technology announces the existence and dangers of chemical flame retardants in various children's products (Publication Date (Web): May 18, 2011). The study, "Identification of Flame Retardants in Polyurethane Foam Collected from Baby Products," details that requests were made for samples of polyurethane foam from baby products, with specific requests for samples of car seats, strollers, changing table pads, nursing pillows, portable crib mattresses, and infant sleep positioners. The Luna Lullaby Bosom Baby™ Pillow, fully meets flammability requirements while remaining flame retardant chemical free. The filling material and cover for the Luna Lullaby Bosom Baby™ Pillow contain no polyurethane foam and are comprised of 100% polyester fiber with no flame retardant chemical additives.

While easily meeting the U.S. flammability standards, California's Technical Bulletin 117 has the most stringent standards. All bedding items containing filling material must meet these standards. All Luna Lullaby Bosom Baby™ Pillows are manufactured to meet the flammability requirements of the U.S. including the California Bureau of Home Furnishings Technical Bulletin 117. The fabric and filling in the Luna Lullaby Bosom Baby™ Pillows and slipcovers meet the requirements without the addition of flame retardant chemicals.
